

St. Labre Indian School

Native American children in the frontier of southeastern Montana face deep-rooted challenges: generational trauma, poverty, and limited opportunities. Our boys and girls are not defined by these hardships because at St. Labre Indian School, they have a New Direction—a path toward a stronger, brighter future for themselves, their families, and their communities throughout the summer months and into the new school year.

New Direction highlights how St. Labre is more than just a school. It is a place where our kids are equipped with the tuition-free education and tools they need to become the leaders and change-makers of tomorrow. Audiences hear directly from students about how St. Labre provides not only a strong education, but also a safe and supportive space where they can take pride in their cultural heritage and grow with confidence.

Air New Direction today and create Proud, Prosperous and Free futures for Native American children of the Northern Cheyenne and Crow Tribes.
